

Any legislature used to protect an industry from having to fairly compete in the marketplace is wrong. I feel that the NAB just got some new competition from satellite radio and are starting to feel threatened. They cry foul to government regulators hoping to save money that would otherwise more wisely be spent in upgrading their services to compete against satellite radio. This smells of the same culture as suing the fast food industry because they made you eat their food every day and you got fat because of it. Where's the responsibility for individuals' actions here? Clearly the NAB fails at taking any responsibility for a loss of revenue due to simple democratic competition. Please do not even consider NAB's petition 04-160. Thanks, Eric Petty
